Student Reflection: What are five important points you learned from doing this activity. Explain
Patron of the Arts
Urbanization

After the first bubonic plague epidemic in 1350, Europe experienced more turmoil. There were too few peasants left alive to seed and harvest the land. Peasants decided they might be able to find better lives for themselves if they moved to the cities, especially the Italian cities on the Mediterranean. Many of the surviving nobles, who could no longer find labourers to work their lands, also moved to these cities. There were more opportunities for work in the Italian cities because of their established trade with other parts of the Mediterranean and because they had already built a successful shipping industry. Within 50 years of the first bubonic plague, cities in Italy became very powerful, especially Florence, Genoa, Venice, and Milan. These cities became the most successful commercial centres of banking, trade, commerce, and industry in Western Europe.

Questions

1. What impact did the bubonic plague have on the lives of people living in Italy?

2. Where did most of the surviving people from the plague move to?

3. List the Italian city states that were the most successful and explain why?

The societies in what is now Italy, more than any other part of western Europe, maintained ties to ancient Roman ways of life after the fall of the Western Roman Empire. The ancient ruins of buildings, such as the Roman coliseum shown here, aqueducts, roads, cities, statues, and artifacts were constant reminders of the power and glory of the ancient Roman Empire.

Questions

4. What was the society that the Italian people wanted to maintain ties with?
There were several reasons why city-states prospered in Italy:

- Mountains to the north helped protect Italy from invaders. This allowed relatively stable development of the city-states.
- Trading cities began to thrive in Italy as early as the 10th century, which meant that life in the Italian Peninsula was already more urban than in northern Europe.
- The feudal system was not strong in Italy due to the urban lifestyle and lack of agricultural land.
- The architectural ruins of the glorious city-states of Ancient Rome reminded the population of how effective that style of government had been.
- The power of the Roman Catholic Church over the Italian city-states weakened when the pope and his court (the papacy) moved from Rome to Avignon, in southern France. Italian city-states could now govern themselves without much interference from the rulings of the Church. They were entirely independent and, initially, many of them organized themselves as individual republics.

Questions

5. How might mountains help an Italian city-state prosper?

6. Why was the feudal system not strong in Italy?

7. Why did the influence of the Catholic Church weaken in Italy?
Most Italian city-states began as republics. In a republic, a group of citizens, rather than a monarch, governs the state. By the late Middle Ages, the most powerful citizens in these republics were members of the new wealthy merchant class. By the 14th century, though, most of the republican governments had failed and the city-states were usually ruled by despots or by oligarchies. Later in this chapter, you will learn that the powerful city-states of Florence and Venice were ruled by oligarchies and Genoa by a despot. Warfare among the city-states over territory and trading routes was common. After decades of fighting, the city-states of Florence, Venice, Milan, and Naples finally signed the Treaty of Lodi in 1454, which brought relative stability to the area for 40 years. In this treaty, Milan and Naples formed an alliance with Florence, and Venice was supported by the papacy. In this agreement, no city-state was allowed to become powerful enough to threaten or overthrow any other city-state. Removing the threat of warfare allowed the city states to focus on improving their trade and amassing huge wealth.

Questions

8. What kind of governmental system did the Italian city states have that made them different from other European countries?

9. What is a despot or oligarchy?

10. What did the Treaty of Lodi accomplish in Italy?

11. What impact did removing warfare from Italy help the city-states to prosper?
